“Matt” Stuart charges a wall lined by the Boys in Blue – result, an early bath for the Grey Riders who limp off casting doubt on the referee’s parent’s marital status.

Meanwhile back on the other wing “Johns” Horse ensure the road is well trampled – proof positive that he did actually move them even if he had not quite grasped the fact that they were supposed to be moving towards the enemy.

At least John's guns knew which way to point their guns.

Though the man in the red shirt did keep looking at his watch to see if it was time for tea.

In the centre, the Rebs pushed forward.

Only to be held and pushed back by IG's dismounted Northern cavalry.

Having lost his horse and foot, MM Stuart, tries to make an impact on J's infantry and guns assaulting "Big Round Top" down the centre of the battlefield.

MMS appears oblivious to the threat from KP's infantry fast approaching from his right flank.

J ignores MMS's feeble attempts to hit a barn door and stays focused on the main target.

Hurrah
